The caucus proposed an annual meeting program on obtaining LEED certification for existing buildings. Unfortunately, the proposal wasn’t selected. The caucus made ties with the Animal Law Caucus to distribute fliers on wolf conservation. There was discussion between the Animal Law Caucus and the Environmental Law Caucus of possibly having a joint program next year on the ways that environmental conservation and animal protection overlap. The caucus selected Taryn Rucinski to be the incoming chair for the next two years to continue this possible joint program idea, replacing the current chair, Emily Marcum. The annual meeting table display was set up and maintained in Seattle.
