FOREWORD

In observance of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the first library school, the Columbia Civic Library School Association has compiled this Directory of Negro Graduates of Library Schools. It should be noted, however, that a large number of Negro librarians now employed throughout the country are not graduates of accredited library schools.

The data for this directory was secured first by consultation with twenty-one of twenty-six library schools listed in the Library Association Handbook, 1936. Five library schools in the South were eliminated because of the dual system of education in that section. Of the twenty-one schools responding to our question, almost all had Negro graduates, although one of Chicago, has had several Negro students attend its courses. In addition to securing names and school training, information was obtained in every instance because a few librarians requested the information that was available. The informants were taken from biographical dictionaries and from the files of the library school directors.

As far as is known, this is the first list of trained librarians to be made available to the profession. It will bring growing emphasis on the idea of library service to Negroes, and will serve a definite need. While it is expected to find its largest use among librarians, it is the hope of the informants that educational administrators and counselors will find it useful.

The Columbia Civic Library Association is indebted to all library school directors for their cooperation.

FOREWORD

In observance of the fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the first library school, the Columbia Civic Library Association has compiled this Directory of Negro Graduates of Accredited Library Schools. It should be stated, however, that the names of a large number of Negro librarians now employed throughout the country are not graduates of accredited library schools.

The data for this directory was secured first by communicating with twenty-one of twenty-six library schools listed in the American Library Association Handbook, 1936. Five schools in the South were eliminated because of the dual system of education in that section. Of the twenty-one schools responding, seven stated that they had no Negro graduates, although one, the University of Chicago, has had several Negro students to attend summer sessions. In addition to securing names and schools, an effort was made to obtain information from each graduate as to his position, training, and library experience. Complete information was not obtained in every instance because a few librarians failed to supply the information requested. Some of the information needed was taken from biographical dictionaries and from the correspondence received from the directors of the library schools.

So far as is known, this is the first list of trained Negro librarians to be made available to the profession. It is hoped, with the growing emphasis on the idea of library service to all, that the directory will serve a definite need. While it is evident that it will find its largest use among librarians, it is the hope of the compilers that educational administrators and counselors in vocational guidance may find it useful.

The Columbia Civic Library Association is indebted to the directors of the library schools for their cooperation.
