Leon Dash Papers, 1966-2009

Biographical Statement

Leon DeCosta Dash Jr. was born March 16, 1944 in New Bedford, Massachusetts and grew up in New York City's Harlem and the Bronx. Dash is a 1968 graduate of Howard University with a BA in history. He was a visiting professor of political science at University of California-San Diego in 1978. He received an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree from Lincoln University, Pennsylvania in 1996. Dash was one of 44 journalists who founded the National Association of Black Journalists on December 12, 1975 and was awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1995. In February 2000, Dash was selected as the first Swanlund Chair Professor in Journalism and Afro-American Studies at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. In August 2003, Dash was appointed as a permanent faculty member of the University of Illinois's Center for Advanced Studies.

Dash first worked as a reporter at the Washington Post from 1966 to 1968. He took a two-year leave of absence and worked as a Peace Corps volunteer high school teacher in rural Kenya, in 1969 and 1970. He returned to the Post in 1971. He lived with and reported on Angolan guerrillas on two occasions: June-September 1973 and October 1976-May 1977, and hiked 2,100 miles on foot through war-torn Angola on the second trip. From 1979 to 1984, Dash was the Post's West Africa Bureau Chief before joining the newspaper's Investigative Desk. Dash left the Post in August 1998 to accept an appointment as a professor in Journalism and Afro-American Studies at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, where he teaches today. From 1995 to 1996, Dash was a Media Fellow of the Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation.

He is co-author (with Ben Bagdikian) of The Shame of the Prisons published by Simon and Schuster in 1972. In 1989, William Morrow and Co. published Dash's book on adolescent childbearing, When Children Want Children: The Urban Crisis in Teenage Childbearing. The University of Illinois Press published the fourth edition of When Children Want Children in March 2003. In September 1996, Basic Books of HarperCollins Publishers published Dash's Rosa Lee: A Mother and Her Family in Urban America, a book based on his Pulitzer Prize-winning newspaper series about a family trapped in the urban underclass. Plume publishers of Penguin, New York City and Profile Books of Great Britain, London published paperback editions of Rosa Lee in 1997. Dash won the George Polk Award of the Overseas Press Club and first prize in International News Reporting of the Washington-Baltimore Newspaper Guild in 1974. In 1984, Dash won the international reporting awards of Africare and the Capitol Press Club. He received First Place in the General News Award from the National Association of Black Journalists and Distinguished Service Award from the Social Services Administration of Maryland in 1986. The following year, he won First Prize in the Public Service Award from the Washington-Baltimore Newspaper Guild and the First Place Award of the Investigative Reporters and Editors Organization. Dash won the Washington Independent Writers President's Award for "excellence in reporting urban affairs" in 1989. A PEN/Martha Albrand special citation for nonfiction work was given to Dash in 1990 for his book When Children Want Children.

In 1995, Dash and Washington Post photographer Lucian Perkins won the Pulitzer Prize for Explanatory Journalism. Dash also won First Prize for print journalism of the Robert F. Kennedy Book and Journalism awards the same year. The National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences, Washington, D. C. Chapter, awarded Dash and producer Luther Brown an Emmy in 1996 in the category of Public Affairs: Hard Issues. He is co-winner of the Washington Monthly magazine's Political Book Award given in March 1997 for the book, Rosa Lee. In June 1997, Dash won First Prize in the Best Book contest of the Harry Chapin Media Awards, World Hunger Year organization for Rosa Lee. In October 1997, Dash received the Prevention for a Safer Society (PASS) Award of the National Council on Crime and Delinquency for Rosa Lee.

In March 1999, New York University's journalism department selected Dash's Washington Post series, Rosa Lee's Story, as one of the best 100 works in 20th-century American journalism.

Holdings of material relating to Dash's life and achievements. Some of the material includes Peace Corps volunteer work along with photos where he gave Turkana pastoralists small pox vaccinations and tuberculosis inoculations. While at the Post, Dash and six other African American reporters filed a discrimination complaint with the Equal Employment Opportunity Agency against the newspaper charging racial inequities (1972). The material includes information regarding the equity complaint along with photos of the employees and the report compiled by the task force on newsrooms. This material also contains awards and recognition from speaking engagements at various forums, at colleges and universities, and delivering the 2000 commencement speech at Parkland College in Champaign, Illinois.

Angola Trip with UNITA Guerrillas 1973-Trip One (Also see box 25 for taped interviews)

In 1973, 1974, 1976-77 Dash lived in Angola and wrote about the civil war and conditions of Angola. This collection is divided into three different trips. The first trip in 1973, Dash lived with and reported on the Union Nacional para Independencia Total de Angola or UNITA guerrillas. He was able to sneak into guerrilla-occupied territory in Angola from neighboring Zambia by Land Rover at night through back roads. He was met by 20 guerrillas at a selected rendezvous point on the Angolan-Zambian border. He spent three months and covered 800 miles on foot taking notes and pictures when they stopped. In October 1973, he reversed his steps and returned to the Zambian capital, Lusaka. From there he went on to London and D.C. where he began transcribing and developing the pictures in order to write the series. The four part series ran in December 1973. This collection contains written notes and interviews, later transcribed, pictures and maps documenting the trip and findings of the guerrilla war against Portuguese colonialism.

Angola Trip Two - 1974 Portuguese Colonial Government

On the second trip to Angola, Dash reported on Angola's Portuguese colonial government. The Movimento Popular de Libertacao de Angola (MPLA), the Frente Nacional de Libertacao de Angola (FNLA), and Union Nacional para Independencia Total de Angola (UNITA) were fighting the colonial government. This collection contains written notes, calendars, articles, pictures, and transcribed interviews of colonial government officers and other people in the north, center and south of Angola.

Angola Trip Three-1976-77 Back with the UNITA Guerrillas and Foreign Correspondent Work

After nearly 500 years of Portuguese rule, Lisbon granted independence to Angola in November 1975. Independence followed 16 years of guerrilla warfare against Portuguese colonial rule. Three liberation movements fought the Portuguese: MPLA, FNLA, and UNITA. With the help of nearly 15,000 Cuban troops and massive aid from the Soviet Union, the Marxist MPLA defeated FNLA and UNITA at the beginning of the Angolan civil war of 1975-76 and established a government in Angola. MPLA, UNITA, and FNLA fought for complete control and power over Angola. Dash went back in 1976-77 to cover the pressing issues there with the UNITA guerrillas again. This collection contains transcribed interviews, notes, and photos.

Adolescent Childbearing Series (Published in Washington Post January 1986, book 1991) (Also see boxes 14-18 for taped interviews)

In 1984 Dash began investigating the high incidence of teenage pregnancy among poor, black urban youths nationwide. He thought the phenomenon grew out of a youthful ignorance about birth-control methods and adolescent reproductive capabilities, but Dash uncovered a reality not captured in statistics. After 12 months of living in Washington Highlands, one of D.C.'s poorest neighborhoods, he found some answers. Lack of knowledge was not the case. This collection is divided into two sections: research and interviews. The research section contains material and statistics gathered for background information on adolescent childbearing and other information such as census reports. Other reports and articles from experts on adolescent childbearing are included in this collection. The interview sections contain notes and transcribed interviews of individuals involved in the project.

Derek Daugherty (Jailed for Debt)

While going in and out of the jail working on the drug addicted officers project, Dash stumbled upon a story that was a major miscarriage of justice. Derek Daugherty was jailed in September 1987 for debt crime that individuals were not usually imprisoned for. Although the jailing was unconstitutional, he spent 28 days in jail, but was released after his attorney told the judge that she did not have the authority under D.C. law to jail someone who was unable to pay a debt-unless the payments were for child support or alimony, which was not Daugherty's case. This collection contains background information on Daugherty's financial history, his marriage and divorce, transcribed interviews, court documents, and a copy of the published article that ran in the Washington Post.

Jamaican Wayne Bennett (Published in Washington Post March 29, 1989)

Dash was interested in looking at young black males' attitudes toward violence and being engaged in violence at the slightest provocation. In 1989 Dash interviewed 20-year-old, Wayne "Jamaican Wayne" Bennett, who lived by the street code of conduct trivial confrontation. Be willing to kill or die to defend your honor. Bennett, who first started carrying a gun at 17, lived in a world that revolved constantly around cocaine dealing and armed robbery. During the time of his interview with Dash, Bennett was serving a six to 18-year sentence for a shooting and two armed robberies. Bennett's story is part of a series "At the Roots of Violence," published in the Washington Post in 1989. The material in this collection consists of transcribed interviews and previous published articles from the Post and other sources.

Dash started going into Washington D.C.'s jails interviewing inmates in August 1987 at the start of an underclass study. After several months, he noticed that a significant part of the jail's guard force was made up of active drug addicts. Over a two-year period, Dash interviewed about 50-odd correctional officers working at the Washington, D.C. jail for a Washington Post series about drug addicts on the jail's guard force. Out of the 50-odd guards, eight agreed to go on the record about their drug addictions. The series, "Drugs in the Ranks: Getting High in D.C. Jail," was published June 10-14, 1990. Material in this collection includes, written and transcribed interviews (some recorded), criminal/and or employee records of participants, articles and research on inappropriate drug use, and performance records for employees.

Underclass Study (Started study in 1988 -Published in Washington Post September 1994-1996) (Also see boxes 20-20 for taped interviews. For Rosa Lee Series see boxes 21-25.)

After finishing the prison series, Dash returned to the underclass project. He worked from the Urban Institute definition of an underclass family (female head of household, welfare-dependent, marginally educated, adults in the family chronically unemployed, criminal recidivism part of family's lifestyle, etc.) and set out to interview members of four families who met the definition. He decided to follow Rosa Lee Cunningham's family. Dash met Rosa Lee during his initial series of interviews in the D.C. jail in 1988. Rosa Lee's family fit the profile. Of her eight children, only two did not become addicted to drugs and rely on a life of crime. The material in this collection is divided into two categories: the underclass study and Rosa Lee. The underclass material consists of taped and transcribed interviews involving the four families, personal information, court documents, and some medical records.

The Rosa Lee collection is divided into two sub-categories: interviews with family (eight children, five grandchildren, brothers and sisters) along with information on the series and book. The first sub-category contains photos of Rosa Lee and family members along with written and transcribed interviews. (The majority of these interviews are recorded on micro mini cassettes and regular 90-minute cassette tapes.) The second sub-category contains outlines of the series and book, along with the actual articles that ran in the newspaper, news briefs on upcoming book development from series, as well as the public's, critics, and city and government officials' responses and opinions on the series and book. The eight part series first appeared in September 1994 front page of the Washington Post. The book Rosa Lee: A Mother and Her Family in Urban America (Harper Collins) was published in 1996.

Restriction of access for 70 years is placed on part of the Rosa Lee collection. One of her eight children dropped out of the project. Rosa Lee's daughter, along with two of her daughters' transcribed and recorded interviews can be viewed in this collection. Material cannot be used or quoted from in this section of the collection.

Car Hopping-Ballou High School Students Killed

In 1996 Dash noticed a phenomenon of girls being killed in southwest Washington D.C. Two high school students, Nikki Lazenby and Nicheshia Semple, were strangled as a result of carhopping-a risky practice that can lead to violence against the female car hoppers. Lazenby and Semple regularly engaged in carhopping. According to one interview, the carhopping phenomenon became evident in the mid-1980s with the onset of the crack cocaine epidemic. Dash interviewed the families of the two girls along with high school friends and teachers. This collection contains material such as flyers (made for search for the missing students), bios on the girls, transcribed interviews, and copies of the published article.

Young Male Killers Research (1998) (Also see boxes 25-27 for taped interviews)

In the early 1990s, the black on black teenage murder rate soared. The homicide rate of victims ages 15 to 19 increased 70 percent from 1985 to 1995. Young black males ages 14 through 24 made up less than 2 percent of the U.S. population, yet they were responsible for almost one in every three murders in this country during the decade before 1995. This Young Male Killers collection of material, from Dash along with Susan Sheehan, is the product of interviews from four different Washington D.C. families (Baines, Hicks, Shaw, and Wallace). Four families were interviewed. The Wallace family's story focused on two brothers, both convicted of murder. The two-part series was published in the Washington Post in November 1998, titled "21st and Vietnam: The Making of Teen Killers." The Hicks's story, "Small Change," was published in 1999 in River Teeth, a non-fiction journal produced by the department of English at Ashland University in Ohio. This collection contains recorded and transcribed interview material from all four families, court documents, criminal records, photos, articles and analysis from experts on issues of young male killers, the original newspaper articles, along with the journal article.
